Metro will be live in Minneapolis all week long with up-to-the minute Pats and Eagles coverage. Be sure to follow along at metro.us and pick up the paper every day this week as we'll have wall-to-wall Pats content for you. Today, my colleague in Philly and I take a look at the reasons why the rest of the country hates Tom Brady, but why we'll defend him to the death here in the Hub. Check it out on page 8 and online at metro.us.

FBI DEPUTY STEPS DOWN AMID CRITICISM: SOURCE

1 FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe, criticized by President Donald Trump for alleged bias against him and in favor of his 2016 Democratic opponent Hillary Clinton, has stepped down as the agency's No. 2 official, a source familiar with the matter said on Monday. McCabe had been expected to leave the Federal Bureau of Investigation in March. He will remain on leave with the law enforcement agency until his retirement date, the source said, speaking on condition of anonymity because a public announcement has not yet been made. Asked about McCabe's departure, White House spokeswoman Sarah Sanders told reporters, "I can tell you the president wasn't part of this decision-making process." Sanders also said Trump continues to have "full confidence" in FBI director Christopher Wray.

PENTAGON REVIEWING USE OF FITNESS APPS

2 U.S. Defense Secretary Jim Mattis has ordered a review of security protocols, officials say, after fitness-tracking devices broadcast patterns of movement at military facilities around the world. Nathan Russer, a student at the Australian National University, drew attention to data when he wrote on Twitter about the images after stumbling upon GPS-tracking company Strava's Global Heatmap. "Once you look at Syria, you can see a bunch of bright spots," Russer said. His discovery prompted others to scour the heat map, turning up other possible locations of U.S. personnel who typically use high-tech fitness devices. Although many of the bases cited by Russer are known outposts for U.S. personnel, there are clear risks that such tracking devices pose, potentially disclosing not just the locations where foreign troops operate but the routes they travel.

INDIA ACCIDENT

3 Indian police rescue people after a bus accident at the Ghogra Canal in Murshidabad district, around 187 miles from Kolkata on Monday. At least 36 people were killed in eastern India's West Bengal state early on Monday after a speeding passenger bus swerved off a bridge and plunged into a river, police said.

BLUE SUPER MOON LEADS TO RARE LUNAR DISPLAY

4 The moon will stage a rare triple show on Wednesday when a blue super moon combines with a total lunar eclipse that will be visible from western North America to eastern Asia, astronomers say. The overlap of a blue moon — the second full moon in a calendar month — with a lunar eclipse while the moon is at its closest approach to the earth is the first such celestial trifecta since 1982, said Noah Petro, a research scientist at NASA's Goddard Space Flight Center outside Washington. "Just having these three things simultaneously occur is unusual," Petro said in a telephone interview. The total eclipse will be visible from the western United States and Canada across the Pacific Ocean to most of Australia and China, as well as northern polar regions. The eclipse will give the moon a reddish color known as a "blood moon."

FACEBOOK TO PROMOTE MORE LOCAL NEWS

5 Facebook Inc. Chief Executive Mark Zuckerberg said on Monday the social media website would focus on promoting local news in its latest update. "Starting today, we're going to show more stories from news sources in your local town or city," Zuckerberg said in a Facebook post. "If you follow a local publisher or if someone shares a local story, it may show up higher in News Feed." The update will be first rolled out in the U.S. then expanded to more countries later this year, Zuckerberg said. The company has been making a series of changes to its website, following criticism that its algorithms may have prioritized misleading news and misinformation in people's feeds, influencing the 2016 American presidential election as well as political discourse in other countries.

SEXUAL HARASSMENT

The National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., has decided to postpone an exhibition because of sexual harassment accusations against the artist, Chuck Close. Should work created by artists who are accused of sexual harassment be exhibited?

OP-ED: I HATE BEING THE 'TOKEN TRANS GIRL'

"It's excessive and suffocating always being the center of attention because of our identity."

I don't like being the token trans girl.

It's weird; Being trans scares the teachers of Brookline High School. Not in a transphobic way — rather, my trans identity prevents them from expressing any sort of opposing opinion.

Ever feel like acing a test? A nice 100 percent to boost your grade? Do you identify as trans?

Easy solution: First, tell a teacher you're trans. Next, write any semi-opinion-based piece for an assignment. The teacher will be too afraid to go against the grain of absolute, unquestionable progressivism and "diversity."

Teachers don't stop there, though. The classroom approach to pronouns—announcing them to the entire class on the first day of school—terrifies trans students. The trans identity is a fragile, vulnerable one, and to announce pronouns is intimidating and, in most cases, damaging. It's hard to gauge students' political and social views until at least a week into class. So, being forced to do something like that in front of the entire class is ridiculous.

Being ostracized, as we are, is almost as bad and damaging as blatant transphobia itself—it's immoral. It's tokenism—a concept the "liberal" members of Brookline despise but that we often find them absentmindedly furthering.

But transphobia is, especially in an environment like Brookline, often much more subtle than violence and outright disapproval. It's instead characterized by reluctance and ignorance, and Brookline is plagued with it. Despite the sticker that sits on almost every door of every room at the school—"LGBTQ Safe Space"—it's really not. Brookline reacts amicably to "the gays," and that's about it.

And, question: Where is the Brookline High School trans support group?

Answer: It doesn't exist.

We really, seriously, need to step up our game.

You can't tell many trans allies about your identity, either, though. They'll nearly burst with excitement:

"Wow! That's amazing! This is truly the best story I have ever heard, you [trans MTF, male-to-female, assigned-male-at-birth, senior at Brookline High School, 17 years old, b. 1999 Morristown, NJ]."

They love labels.

It's excessive and suffocating, always being the center of attention because of our identity.

This isn't what we fight and it isn't what we fought for. Yes, we did fight for recognition—but the amount of common sense people lack is astonishing. What group would want to be listened to, recognized, and appreciated, solely based on their identity and not, necessarily, their personality?

Brookline High School wants to create an inclusive, safe environment, filled with diverse viewpoints? Here's a suggestion: First, gender me correctly. Maybe then we can move away from ostracization — and eventual marginalization — and move toward that which the faux-progressives are convinced we already have.

Someday, in the most visceral, honest, personal way, I hope to be myself — not my identity. NICK COLLINS

Nick Collins is a senior at Brookline High School in Brookline, Massachusetts. She is a trans woman, and she is involved in LGBTQ activism within her school and community. She runs an LGBTQ podcast titled 'Dialog(ue),' which can be found at bhsdialogue.com. Send op-eds to Letters@metro.us.

Gaming Commission investigates Everett casino after sexual-misconduct claims

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Gambling mogul Steve Wynn faces abuse allegations from employees, putting his local project under scrutiny.

Everett's Wynn casino project faces scrutiny after casino mogul Steve Wynn stepped down from his position on the Republican National Committee amid sexual misconduct allegations.

A Wall Street Journal report Friday detailed dozens of stories from Wynn Resorts employees who say Wynn himself "sexualized his workplace and pressured workers to perform sex acts."

Though Wynn responded to the allegations saying, "The idea that I ever assaulted any woman is preposterous," he resigned as finance chair of the Republican National Committee on Saturday, according to Politico.

The Massachusetts Gaming Commission also announced following the allegations a review into Wynn Resorts to determine whether Wynn's alleged behavior violates his company's gaming license.

"The commission is now aware of and is taking very seriously the troubling allegations detailed in The Wall Street Journal article," a spokesperson for the gaming commission said in a statement. "The suitability and integrity of our gaming licensees is of the utmost importance, and ensuring that suitability is an active and ongoing process.

"Consequently," the statement continued, "the MGC's Investigations and Enforcement Bureau will conduct a regulatory review of this matter to determine the appropriate next steps."

Gov. Charlie Baker thinks the investigation is the right move, saying, according to CBS, "I look forward to what they glean from this investigation."

"The reports and the allegations associated with Steve Wynn were appalling," Baker added on Sunday, CBS reported. "I'm really glad the Republican National Committee stepped back and he stepped down."

The Everett Wynn casino is slated to open June 2019. Everett City Councilor Michael McLaughlin weighed in on the situation Sunday night as well, saying in a statement that the allegations were "deeply concerning" to him both as a city councilor and also because he was a vocal supporter of the Wynn Everett project.

A rendering of the planned Wynn casino. COURTESY OF WYNN RESORTS

He said while he does believe the company should be investigated, the project should move forward.

"Since the beginning, my support for Wynn in Everett stemmed from the job opportunities, economic growth, and development of the unusable contaminated land, all of which would positively impact our community and region for years to come," he said. "I do not believe the thousands of people who this project will positively impact should be punished for one individual's alleged behavior.

"That being said, it is important we take these allegations seriously and allow the Massachusetts Gaming Commission to conduct a thorough investigation," he added. "It is my highest priory that anyone living or working in our community is never subject to sexual harassment, under any circumstances. I have full faith in the Massachusetts Gaming Commission to come forward with an appropriate resolution which will not hinder the progress of the project but will simultaneously show zero tolerance for sexual misconduct in any capacity."

Alec Baldwin said something bad

Say what you will about Alec Baldwin, but he sure doesn't know when to shut his damn trap.

His latest offense? Comparing Dylan Farrow to a fictional character who lied about her rape in "To Kill a Mockingbird," a novel that was released in 1960. Classy!

The 59-year-old took to Twitter to defend Woody Allen again, writing, "1 of the most effective things Dylan Farrow has in her arsenal is the 'persistence of emotion. Like Mayella in TKAM, her tears/exhortations r meant 2 shame u in2 belief in her story. But I need more than that before I destroy some1, regardless of their fame."

Yet again.

As Vulture points out, Baldwin essentially tried to make a point about how Dylan Farrow wasn't sexually abused by her father by comparing her to a literary character who was sexually abused by her father.

As always, Baldwin doth protest too much. Either that, or details are just far too inconvenient for him.

Kate Winslet's "bitter regrets"

Why, yes: This is another Woody Allen story. This time, we're talking about Kate Winslet. Please: Sit by the fire, whiskey in hand, and join me for a of dark, depressive tale.

When asked about her history of working with Allen, Winslet has famously said things like, "It's just a difficult discussion" and "I think on some level Woody [Allen] is a woman." Now, she's changing her tune in the most noncommittal way possible.

Too little, too late, Kate.

The "Wonder Wheel" actress spoke out about working with abusers in the past, without naming names, at the London Critics Circle Film Awards this weekend.

"I wouldn't be able to stand here this evening and keep to myself some bitter regrets that I have at poor decisions to work with individuals with whom I wish I had not," she said in part.

I don't know, Kate. At this point, it might be better to just lump yourself in with the Alec Baldwins and keep it moving. You can keep your regrets, babe.

Chrissy Teigen's baby boy

Awwwww!
ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Chrissy Teigen is having a boy!

The 32-year-old confirmed via Instagram that she and husband John Legend are expecting a boy with a cute lil' caption: "Mama and her baby boy."

The couple conceived through in vitro fertilization, which they also did for their daughter 21-month-old daughter, Luna. "We did the harvesting — as they call it — again, where they make the embryos," she told People.

Teigen has also hinted to having a boy in the past: Last year she took to Twitter, saying, "Since this is coming up again, I said our next baby would be a boy because that is the embryo we have left. A boy. So. Yeah."

Fun! Congratulations to our forever faves and what will be an adorable and hopefully not completely ridiculously named lil' babe.

It pays to be Meryl Streep

Meryl Streep would like to cash in on the luxury of being, well, herself.

"The Post" actress has reportedly filed a trademark to protect her name, as one does. TMZ reports that the 68-year-old actress filed an application with the U.S. Trademark Office, asking for a monopoly on the use of her name as far as entertainment services, i.e. "live, televised, and movie appearances by a professional actress and entertainer."

The application also covers public-speaking engagements, autograph signings and websites related to motion pictures. Baby girl is getting them coins!

The copyright will essentially act as legal protection so that nobody can use her name to sell anything entertainment-related.

Not sure what it's like to be rich or famous — or important enough to copyright my own name — so can't tell if this is cool or bonkers. But congrats, maybe?

The most celebrated and beloved actress of our time.

Boston chef 'out for blood'

Sarah Wade goes for gold tonight on the Food Network.

MATT JUUL
matthew.juul@metro.us

Sarah Wade wasn't born in New England, but that didn't stop her from bringing a Patriots mind-set to the "Chopped: Gold Medal Games" grand finale.

Channeling Bill Belichick's "do your job" mantra, the Oklahoma native and executive chef at Lulu's Allston tells Metro that she wanted to keep a cool, focused mentality going into the final round of the tournament, which airs Tuesday at 10 p.m. on the Food Network. Rather than get caught up in any smack talk in the "Chopped" kitchen, she decided to keep her head down and let her skill as a chef speak for itself.

"Going into the finale, I was like, 'I'm out for blood. I'm out to win it all,'" says Wade. "I just went in with the mentality of be cool, tuck my head and do your thing."

While fans will have to wait until tonight to see if Wade ends up taking home the $50,000 prize, she's already proved herself as a worthy competitor. Wade had an impressive performance in the opening round of the tournament, easily winning the fry-themed episode to earn her spot in the grand finale.

The Boston chef impressed the judges by bringing her Southern comfort style to far-out-there basket ingredients like alligator, lotus root, haggis in a can and matcha powder.

"Of course you go to win, but when I actually won I was like, 'Holy s--t,'" Wade says. "It was an amazing experience. Tough, definitely, but man, was it satisfying to win that first round."

Wade, who likes to rely on her Midwestern roots when she's in the kitchen, believes the key to frying is to know how your products will react to the process. For instance, vegetables work better with lighter, tempura-style batters as opposed to the heavy crust that's used to make fried chicken.

"When it comes to frying, you have to know the product," Wade says. "Some have to be fried hot and fast, otherwise they're going to get tough. Some you can actually go a little bit slower and longer, like a softer meat."

Prior to shipping up to the Hub, the Oklahoma State University graduate got her first job in the business as a banquet chef at a Houston hotel. After bouncing around North Carolina and Texas, she worked at a Hyatt in Connecticut before making the move to Boston.

Wade had a choice between going to New York or taking the job at Lulu's — which she found on Craigslist — and says that coming to the Bay State to cook what she loves was the best decision of her life.

"It definitely was a better fit for me," Wade says. "I packed my stuff in Connecticut and drove up to Boston. It's my best decision to date."

SUPER BOWL COUNTDOWN

Reasons why everyone loves or despises Brady

Tom Brady will play for his sixth Super Bowl ring this Sunday.

EVAN MACY & MATT BURKE
sports@metro.us

There really is no middle ground when it comes to Tom Brady. The five-time Super Bowl champion will be in his favorite place — in the spotlight once again — when the Patriots and Eagles clash in Super Bowl LII.

Ironically, many of the same reasons so many can't stand Brady are the reasons why so many others can't get enough of him. Metro Philly's Evan Macy laid out his reasons for hate, while Metro Boston's Matt Burke put a New England spin on things. Here are the 12 things to love and hate about Brady starting with the hate:

1 He plays for the Patriots

They are the modern evil empire. Every time I think about them Darth Vader's theme song plays in my head. Having good teams is good for a sport. Having great teams is better. Having a dynasty is rare and seeing one team win all the time gets old. It's like capitalism — we want people to get rich, but not diabolically rich. The Pats are diabolically rich.

2 He is really, really smug

Did you see Brady after he hurt his hand talk to the media? How about a little respect? That's not exactly brevity. Just because you are really good at football you're allowed to give gigglingly-short answers to important questions?

3 He is way too good looking to be good at football

It's not enough that he has millions of dollars, a supermodel for a wife and striking good looks — he has to be the best quarterback of all time too?

4 He won't come clean (about Deflategate)

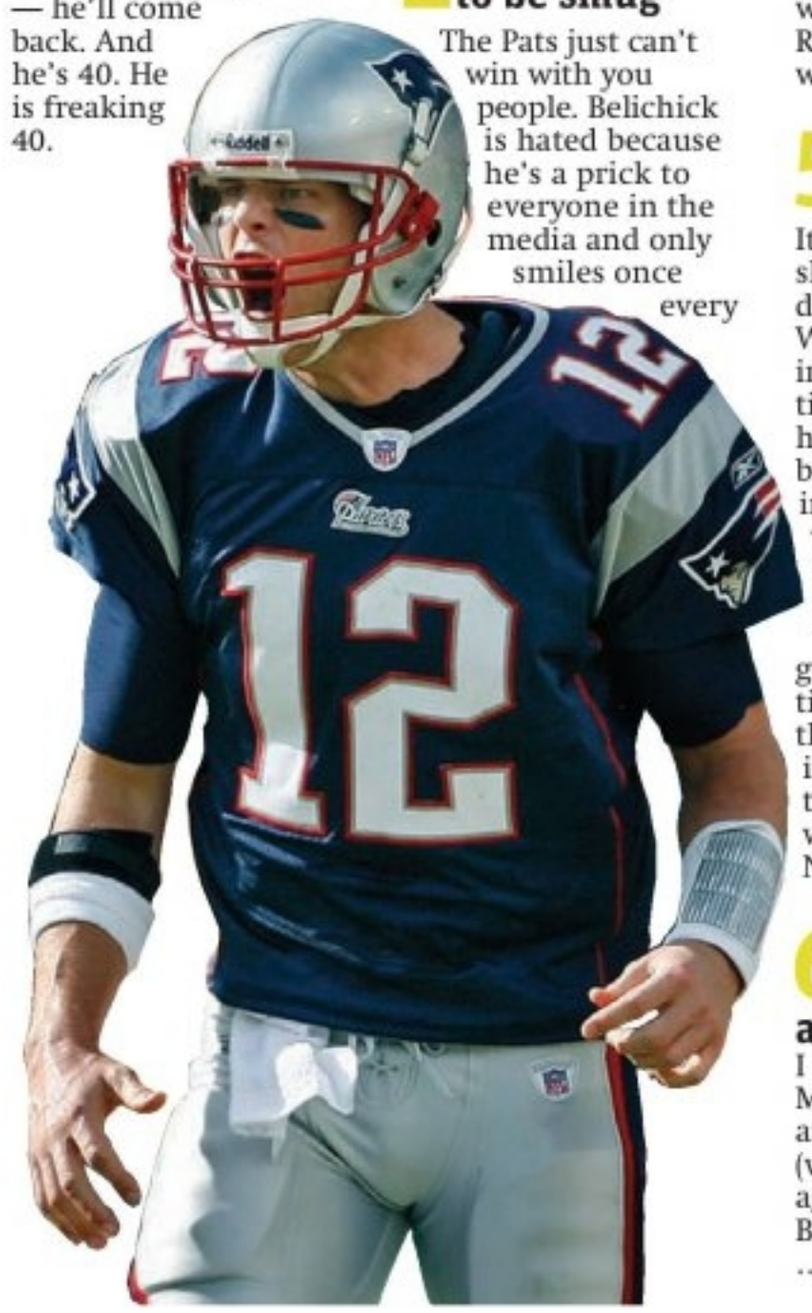
All I know is that the requested text messages during the NFL's investigation of Deflategate were deleted right after Brady was asked for them. Trying to get an edge is one thing. Cheating is another.

5 He likes Donald Trump

Brady and the president were friends — just like Patriots' owner Robert Kraft was. A "Make America Great Again" hat was seen in his locker room back during Trump's campaign and that makes me a little uncomfortable.

6 He just won't go away

Brady always find a way to come back. If the Eagles have a late lead and Brady has any time — he'll come back. And he's 40. He is freaking 40.



That's one way of looking at things. For Boston's sports editor Matt Burke, things aren't quite so skewed. Here's a look at six reasons to love Tom Brady:

1 He plays for the five-time SB champion Patriots

The Patriots are the greatest dynasty of our sports lifetimes in this country as the NFL is not built for sustained success. It's been 16 years since their first title. It's time for the rest of the country to embrace the Pats' greatness, much like the country eventually and collectively threw up their hands toward the end of Michael Jordan's career and said, "OK, fine. They're the best ever. Gotta enjoy this while it lasts."

2 He has reason to be smug

The Pats just can't win with you people. Belichick is hated because he's a prick to everyone in the media and only smiles once every third Blue Moon. Brady, meanwhile, is vilified for treating everyone - the media, his opponents - with the utmost respect … all with a smile on his face.

3 He is way too good looking to be good at football

This is true. When Jimmy Garoppolo was still here it looked like a damned Hollister photo shoot every day in Foxborough.

4 He doesn't have to come clean about Deflategate

Brady is married to the most famous supermodel in the world. Gotta think he has one or two inappropriate pics of Gisele on his phone. There were leaks all over the place with NFL execs at this time … why would Brady trust Roger Freakin' Goodell with his phone?

5 He LIKED Donald Trump

It's obvious their friendship is over. Brady didn't show up to the White House last spring in the Pats' celebration there, and Trump hasn't mentioned him by name since (including the celebration when Trump was perturbed by Brady snubbing him). Brady went golfing with the guy like three or four times in the mid-2000s, then Trump started acting like they were besties during the election when he wanted to win New Hampshire.

6 He doesn't need to go away

I have nostalgia for Dan Marino, Joe Montana and even Brett Favre (who I despised 10 years ago). NFL Fans will miss Brady when he's gone … eventually.

Patriots notebook: Brady with an eventful Monday

Tom Brady had an out of the ordinary Monday morning, cutting short his weekly interview with WEEI early in the morning before addressing thousands of Patriots fans at Gillette Stadium in a send-off rally for the Super Bowl.

Brady was peeved with the sports radio station for what part-time host Alex Reimer said last week on the air while discussing Brady's documentary, "Tom vs. Time." Reimer described Brady's 5-year-old daughter as "an annoying little pissant" and was suspended indefinitely by WEEI for the remark.

"I've tried to come on this show for many years and showed you guys a lot of respect," Brady said on "Kirk and Callahan" Monday (Reimer is often a guest on the show). "I've always tried to come on and do a good job for you guys. It's very disappointing when you hear [the comments about my daughter]. My daughter or any child certainly don't deserve that.

"I really don't have much to say this morning. Maybe I'll speak with you guys some other time," Brady said before hanging up.

WEEI and the Patriots reached a deal just last week for the Pats quarterback to continue to be interviewed on the show on a weekly basis.

Brady was obviously in much better spirits at the rally as the sizable crowd showered him with cheers.

Tom Brady at the Patriots' send-off rally Monday at Gillette Stadium. GETTY IMAGES

"Thank you guys for your support all year," Brady said. "It's been an incredible journey. We have one more to go. It's going to be fun. Patriot Nation is stronger than ever. We have one more to go … We love you. Patriots out!"

Injury updates

Brady had the 12 stitches removed from his throwing hand last week and is good to go for Super Bowl LII.

Things are still murky, however, when it comes to Rob Gronkowski — who was limited in practice last week. Gronkowski is still in the concussion protocol. If he is cleared by an independent neurologist by the end of this week he is expected to play in Super Bowl LII.

Gronkowski is not allowed to speak with the media until he is cleared from the concussion protocol, much to the dismay of the national news media who view Gronk as the only true "quotable" player on the Pats. MATT BURKE

Vitamin B1 (Thiamine) After Cardiac Arrest Study

Learn about this post cardiac arrest study that may affect you or someone you know.

Cardiac arrest is an emergency condition in which your heart and breathing stop, requiring cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) to restart the heart. Sudden cardiac arrest affects approximately 300,000 people annually in the U.S.

Thiamine After Cardiac Arrest (THACA) is an emergency medicine research study designed to determine if Vitamin B1 (Thiamine) can improve survival and prevent brain injury in patients who have had a cardiac arrest. There are currently no medications known to have a beneficial effect on post-arrest outcome, and brain injury and death are very common. Vitamin B1 deficiency is not uncommon after cardiac arrest, and deficiency is known to cause brain injury in other settings. This research study is taking place at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center and will last for approximately 4-5 years. Participants who are brought to the hospital after a cardiac arrest and are enrolled in this study will be randomly assigned to receive Vitamin B1 or placebo (no active medication) for two days after suffering a cardiac arrest.

Because of the importance of administering Vitamin B1 (Thiamine) as soon as possible after cardiac arrest in order to maximize the chance of finding a benefit, this study will be conducted under exception from informed consent (EFIC) in accordance with the federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulations. EFIC is allowed only when testing possible treatments for life-threatening conditions for which there is no alternative proven treatment, when obtaining consent is not possible because the study treatment must be administered quickly and a legally authorized representative of the patient is not present or reachable.

When legally authorized representatives are available to provide consent, research staff will obtain consent prior to enrollment. For participants enrolled under EFIC, they or their representatives will be notified of enrollment as soon as possible and asked if they would like to continue participation, with the option to withdraw from the study at any time.

The purpose of this handout is to notify our community about this study and to provide contact information and resources where you can learn more. If you do not wish to be a participant in this study, please visit the website below or call the number listed below to find out how you can opt out. Individuals who opt out will be sent a bracelet and the study team will maintain a list of these induvial to ensure they are not enrolled under EFIC.

Aries Channel your energy wisely. Don't take on responsibilities that don't belong to you. Being taken advantage of will only lead to resentment. Consider your options carefully.

Taurus Don't jump just because someone else does. Think and do things that further your own interests. Protect your home, family, position and reputation.

Gemini You'll be tempted to take a last-minute trip or make a hasty decision that could affect your prospects. Stop and think. Uncertainty should be a warning sign to sit tight.

Cancer Don't mix emotions and money. If you must make a decision regarding health, try not to be objective. An opportunity will only turn out well if you are moderate.

Leo Make the most of your day. Your energetic approach to relationships and physical challenges will change the way you do things. Motivation and perseverance are highlighted.

Virgo Keep moving and don't stop until you have taken care of all your responsibilities. Neglecting something important will not bode well with someone depending on you.

Libra Make personal adjustments that will boost your confidence and make you feel great. A promising offer will be made because of the way you present your skills.

Scorpio Learn all you can from people who have more experience or knowledge about something that interests you. What you discover will make a difference to your future.

Sagittarius An opportunity you are given should be looked at cautiously. Don't feel pressured to make a hasty move. A snap decision will lead to regret.

Capricorn Partnerships will disappoint you if you are too quick to agree or follow someone who decides to make a last-minute change. Stand alone, if necessary.

Aquarius An unexpected turn of events should be handled cautiously. Keep your personal information a secret. Double-check any information you receive.

Pisces Discuss your ideas and intentions. Sharing with others will help you gain support and the help you need to follow through. EUGENIA LAST
